Building bimodal bridges

August 26, 2015 by Mary Allen

Gartner has applied a simple framework to complex IT reality. Separating the enterprise into “bimodal” IT operation, Gartner researchers claim that 75 percent of enterprises now experience a bifurcation of IT into two modes, based on surveys of the firm’s client base.

Micro data centres doing the bridgework for IoT

September 2, 2015 by Denise Deveau

The latest concept that is gaining attention with enterprises and small businesses alike is the micro data centre (mDC). Some will argue that micro data centres are no different than the traditional self-contained data centres housed in a shipping container for easy transport which have been around for years...“In very simple terms, they’re a smaller version of the traditional prefabricated centre” Steven Carlini, Schneider Electric.

CenturyLink CSO on defence against the “five bad actors”

July 27, 2015 by Mary Allen

“I think where many small, mid and sometimes even large companies will evolve to is to say, ‘the five bad actors’ are so sophisticated, I can’t even hire enough people to deal with it. I will move to outsource my risk or transfer it to a company with a managed security offering.” Dave Mahon, CenturyLink. Read more

Collabmobilicloud at the extreme edge – The Internet of Things

Here is ‘Why’ our Managing editor concludes that IoT is “collabmobilicloud on steroids”.

The Internet of Things continues to gain momentum - at least in the opinion of countless market forecasters. Counting the number of devices that will be connected to the Internet by 2020, analysts have variously estimated the total at 212 billion (IDC), 75 billion (Morgan Stanley), 50 billion (Ericsson, Cisco, ABI Research), 26 billion (Gartner) - Read More
